Lydia spoke in terms of hearty-satisfaction of her visit in Boston, -both in respect to business, and socially in your household,

I am anxious about Mr. Jackson from the account she bro't - hope that ere this he may be better.

Have just had two very good meetings here, & leave tomorrow for Genesota, where I hope to be joined by Susan.

Shall be at home again about three weeks hence.

welfare, - and ^{that} of the home circle at Ghent,

I have unfortunately had some cold for a week past, but am improving, and nearly sound again.

I am grieved to learn through Lydia that such is the state of your health that you are forbidden to speak again for the winter. I am very sorry to relinquish, as she says we must, the hope of your cooperation in our winter Conventions, - even at Albany.

When I sent you a note by Lydia (which I was sorry I had troubled you with) I thought we should

He referred to you and our movement, in terms of warm personal interest. He seems to have enjoyed very fully the N.Y. Anniversary meetings last spring, and my friends at Utica tell me that his preaching has been much more spirited and ~~aggressive~~ since - that he seems to have renewed his age.

He will attend the Canastota Convention with Susan and myself Saturday and Sunday next.

I left home on Friday last, passed the day with Lydia in adjusting ~~the~~ arrangements at our new rooms in Albany, - and on Saturday and Sunday had an excellent visit with my ~~beloved~~ Anna, at Utica.

Dear Mr. Garrison:

134 Two or three days since I passed an hour with Beriah Green at his home in Whitesboro, in making arrangements for a Convention to be held on Saturday and Sunday next at Canastota.

He mentioned during our interview that he did not have, but should very much enjoy, the reading of the Liberator. He is in humble circumstances, - has a large family, with limited resources, - Could not a gratuitous copy of the Liberator (by the Honey Comb, or the Am. A.S.S.) be sent to him? Whitesboro, N.Y. - I am sure it would be most worthily and profitably bestowed.
